Expensive Plans and Fees Can Eat Up Your Profits

Whether you are just starting your career as a tax professional or you are a seasoned expert, one of your largest yearly expenses could be the cost of your tax software. In addition, many tax software companies charge extra for each return filed and for returns filed in different states, as well as bank product, service, and technology fees. There can also be costs for specialty business modules, for access to the client portal, extra document storage, and additional users.

These hidden fees can add up and really eat into your profits at the end of your tax season. Be sure to not only consider the up front cost of the plan, but ask about any hidden or extra fees they may charge.
